

TWO INTERESTING FINDS — FROM DELAWARE COUNTY AND S. BLOOMFIELD, OHIO

by
John Medici
Ostrander, OH

Shown are two surface-found artifacts. The first is the top portion of a fluted point pictured in obverse and reverse. It is made of Coshocton flint and remnants of the central flutes are evident on both sides. It is possible that this fluted point may have been broken from farm machinery, thus the rest of this 12,000 year old piece is probably still in the field.

The second artifact is an eccentric which was found on our property. Like some eccentrics, it is made from what appears to have been a functional point – in this case an Archaic corner notch. After breaking, it perhaps was furnished with the strange – and usually undecipherable exaggerated flaking. These flakes have been removed from inside one of the hafting notches, two of them from the base, and several of them from the sides of the piece.

Figure 1 (Medici) Basal portion of a fluted point.

Figure 2
(Medici)
Eccentric flint.